Increasing the price of petrol is the best way to solve growing traffic and pollution problems.

Pollution and traffic congestion have still be headaches for many people. Some suggest that these problems can be mitigated to the lowest extent via an increase in petrol costs. I believe that increasing the price of petrol is far from the best solution.

It is for sure that private car use contributes to more exhaust gases and thicker traffic; however, increasing the price of petrol cannot limit the number of private vehicle drivers for long. If the capacity of public transport cannot keep up with the growing demand for buses, trains or railways, people will still drive to commute.
